

Recycling Should Be Law

Today it's my brother's birthday. We decided to take a family trip to the beach. We get there, throw down a blow-up mat and get ready for a swim. I'm first to step into the water. I plan to find a fish. I jump up, take a big breath, and dive down into the water. Down at the bottom of the ocean, I feel disgusted as I see chip packets, papers and even someone's old underwear. I get no fish. I swim out thirty minutes later, after a pointless search. "Any luck?" Kael, my brother calls out to me. "Not today," I mumble shocked at what I've seen. If we don't recycle and take action now to prevent littering, we will be stuck with a problem on our hands. Recycling should be law, and there should be punishments for those who decide not to. ✓

It's our world, our future. Therefore, we should be busting our guts to make the world a better place, full of clean air and healthy people. If we don't recycle, our environment suffers deeply. Can you even imagine a world without plants, trees, animals or even humans? It's our health we're talking about, for it's a well know fact that plants produce oxygen, and we need oxygen to survive. People should get fined for not recycling. ✓

Scientists estimate that by the year 2020, there will be more rubbish than fish in the sea. I mean, WOW! How revolting that we would let something like that happen. Many items we put in the rubbish bin should be recycled, or made into something new. For example, cans can be recycled or made into candle holders or pot plants. Recycling should be law. ✓

Of course recycling isn't just putting things into the yellow bin. You can make old clothes into rags, and give unwanted goods like toys, clothes and books to the Opshop. Almost half of our world's population is homeless or living in poverty. By donating to places like Opshops, everyday items become affordable for the less-fortunate to buy. ✓

This is our world, so it's our problem. We can stand around not doing anything, or instead, we can take action. Anything we do now will affect humans of the future. If we recycle and stop littering, we will not suffer any longer. Recycling should be law! ✓

Fantastic!

The day I woke up with magical powers and how they nearly killed me. . . . 13.6.1

I felt this weird, sizzling sensation in my nose. I thought it was about to sneeze, so I ran to get a tissue. My eyes closed and my mouth opened, and I sneezed the hardest I ever sneezed. But, nothing came out. Then suddenly, I heard a gigantic blast from my nose. I was thrown against the wall! I looked down at my nose and saw a tiny stick of dynamite hanging out of my nose in snoot. I tried blowing it out, but it wouldn't go. It finally came to me, I have magical powers! I was freaking out, I could actually sneeze dynamite. I felt another sneeze coming up, so I tried to blow it in. Bad idea! It was a big stick of dynamite and it had just exploded my organs. ^{at least I didn't explode any important ones.} I screamed for my mum and I was rushed to the hospital. As I layed in the ^{hospital} bed I felt another sneeze. All I could think about was, I hate my power.
